Latino Community Includes Many “Hard-to-Count” Residents

- Lower-income families
- Immigrants
- Individuals with low English-language proficiency
- Renters
- Residents who live in non-traditional housing
- Rural residents
- Highly mobile residents, such as farmworkers
- Very young children (under age 5)
Census 2010 missed more than 400,000 very young Latino children.

This is a uniquely high “undercount” rate. In 2010, the net undercount rate for very young Latino children was 7.1 percent, compared to 4.3 percent for non-Latinos.

Bureau was mandated to conduct the 2020 Census at a lower cost per household than 2010. Its plans have fallen short.

Bureau is making final tests to changes and new approaches which all have important implications for the Latino community:

- Internet response as primary response option
- Reduction in number of local census offices, field staff, field “presence”
- Use of administrative records and other third-party data for address canvassing and non-response follow-up (NRFU)
- Redesign of questions on Hispanic origin and race
- Last-minute addition of untested question on citizenship
Census Bureau undertook extensive research to improve data collection on Hispanic origin and Race in 2020

Census Bureau staff recommended a new format that combined Hispanic Origin and Race that:

- Achieved significant decline in nonresponses and “some other race” responses
- Achieved better reporting of Latino identification by respondents
- Did not result in loss of data on Latinos who wish to identify with multiple major race/ethnicity groups
- Accommodated reporting of multiple Latino national origins.

Combined question required revision of federal standards on race and ethnicity data; OMB silent on decision to keep current standards in place.
Two-question format for Census 2020 raises questions

- Questions in End-to-End test differ from those submitted to Congress. Instructions for Hispanic origin question do not indicate that respondents can report multiple Latino national origins; Bureau does not intend to provide data on respondents who mark multiple boxes.

- Unclear how Latinos will be respond to detailed reporting of White and Black sub-group identifications; Afro-Caribbean examples not included in Black/African American question.

- Census Bureau projects that with two-question approach, “some other race” could become the second largest racial group in the nation in Census 2020.
Inadequate Census Funding Puts Fair and Accurate 2020 Count at Risk

• Congress has underfunded the Bureau in FY 2016, FY 2017 and the first half of FY 2018.

• The FY 2018 omnibus appropriations legislation provided $2.8 billion for the Bureau, a promising start to put Census 2020 back on track.

• The President’s FY 2019 budget request includes $3.8 billion for the Bureau; insufficient for the continued ramp-up needed.

• Stakeholders are advocating for $4.7 billion for FY 2019, to allow for a robust Census 2020 partnership and communications program, increase the number of local Census offices, and to provide a contingency fund requested by the Department of Commerce.
Consequences of Inadequate Funding for Census 2020

• Cancelled 2017 field tests in Puerto Rico and on Native American reservations.

• Cancelled two of three 2018 “dress rehearsal” sites, including Pierce County, WA with a significant Latino rural population, and scaled back the remaining site in Providence County, RI.

• Changed the enumeration approach for 12 million households in remote and rural areas.

• Delayed opening three of six Regional Census 2020 offices.

• Delayed communications campaign and Partnership Program.
Other Census Administration and Legislative Issues

• The Census Bureau has been without a permanent Director since July 1. The Administration must nominate a new Director who is an established, nonpartisan leader with the expertise to lead the Bureau – and to win the trust of policymakers, staff, and the public.

• The GAO has designated Census 2020 as a “high risk” activity, citing new enumeration approaches and uncertain IT systems.

• Erosion of public trust regarding the privacy of information given to the Census Bureau, including via the internet, and increased fear among immigrants in contact with the government.

• Administration’s decision to hire only U.S. citizens as Census employees.
Administration’s Last Minute Addition of Citizenship Question Puts Census 2020 at Serious Risk

• On March 26, the Secretary of Commerce agreed to a Department of Justice request, and added the citizenship question to the 2020 Census questionnaire at the last minute.

• Census Bureau submitted Census 2020 questionnaire to Congress with this question.

Is this person a citizen of the United States?
- Yes, born in the United States
- Yes, born in Puerto Rico, Guam, the U.S. Virgin Islands, or Northern Marianas
- Yes, born abroad of U.S. citizen parent or parents
- Yes, U.S. citizen by naturalization – Print year of naturalization
- No, not a U.S. citizen
The Department of Justice and the Secretary of Commerce justified the addition by citing the need for better voting rights enforcement.

However, data from the American Community Survey, and the census “long” form before that, are sufficiently robust for civil rights and Voting Rights Act enforcement. The decennial census has not included a citizenship question since enactment of the Voting Rights Act in 1965.

Secretary of Commerce claims lack of evidence that citizenship question will depress response rates, but question has not been tested in current political climate, in a form sent to 100% of population.

The “End to End” Providence County test does not include a citizenship question. Media report the issue is affecting participation.

Census Bureau representatives have already reported widespread and unprecedented fear among respondents to other surveys; they are reluctant to participate fully and provide accurate information.

Administration’s actions to add citizenship question are flawed and specious.

• President Trump’s use of citizenship question in campaign fundraising and other policymaker comments suggest addition of question is politically motivated.

Friend,

The President wants the 2020 United States Census to ask people whether or not they are citizens.

In another era, this would be COMMON SENSE... but 19 attorneys general said they will fight the President if he dares to ask people if they are citizens.

The President wants to know if you’re on his side.

Do you believe the 2020 United States Census should ask if people are American citizens?

The Census Bureau conducts careful and costly testing over many years to develop the census questions.

Census Bureau was required to submit topics for 2020 Census to Congress by March 31, 2017; citizenship was not submitted at that time.

The Administration’s request is untimely.
The Census Bureau expects that every one percent decrease in the self-response rate that it has budgeted will increase the cost of the census by $55 million. This figure was recently increased from $45 million and will likely increase again.

• A last-minute question would require redrafting all designed materials, adding unknown costs in design, labor, printing, and for other tasks.
The addition of a citizenship question will deter participation, resulting in far less accurate data.

- The question will raise concerns in all households – native- and foreign-born—about the confidentiality of information provided to the government and how it will be used.

- Adding the question would sabotage the Constitutional mandate that the Census obtain a complete count of all of the nation’s residents.
There is a groundswell of bipartisan opposition to the addition of the citizenship question from a wide range of census stakeholders, including:

- More than 60 members of Congress;
- 161 Democratic and Republican mayors;
- Latino elected and appointed officials at all levels of government;
- Six former Census Directors who served in Republican and Democratic administrations;
- Nineteen Attorneys-General;
- Scientific organizations such as the American Sociological Association, the Consortium of Social Science Associations, the Council for Community and Economic Research, the Council of Professional Associations on Federal Statistics, and the National Latino/a Psychological Association; and
- Business leaders from across the country concerned about undermining the validity of census data, and ultimately harming economic growth and development opportunities.
Under Title 13 of U.S. Code:

- Census data can only be used for statistical purposes; personal information cannot be used against respondents in court or by a government agency.

- Personal census information cannot be disclosed for 72 years (includes names, addresses, Social Security numbers and telephone numbers).

- Census Bureau staff who have access to personal information are sworn for life to protect confidentiality.
  - Sworn staff are subject to a 250,000 fine and/or up to five years in prison for wrongful disclosure of information.
Policymakers and Advocates are Vigorously Challenging the Addition of a Citizenship Question

Secretary of Commerce must justify new topic: Because the Bureau did not submit citizenship as one of the topics for Census 2020 to Congress by March 31, 2017, the Secretary of Commerce must demonstrate that there are “new circumstances” for adding a new topic after that deadline. It is unclear whether the Secretary has done so, and this may be one ground for challenging a new citizenship question.

Litigation: The State of California is challenging the question in court, and New York is leading a multi-state action against the Administration’s decision. Civil rights organizations are also starting to bring court action.
Congressional action:
Members of Congress are working to move legislation forward that would prevent the addition of the citizenship question. The House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform is holding a May 8\textsuperscript{th} hearing on Census 2020.

Public opinion advocacy:
Several media outlets have been covering the citizenship question issue; as policymakers and advocates continue to speak out, that coverage is becoming more intense.
We are launching an comprehensive advocacy campaign against the addition of the citizenship question, mobilizing our members and stakeholders by:

• Providing sample letters and other resources to submit comments to the Bureau and OMB when opportunities arise.

• Conducting regular “Call-in Days,” to Secretary Ross and Members of Congress, opposing the citizenship question.

• Continuing to promote legislative and public opinion advocacy, by providing materials and resources. A sample letter and social media guide are available at: www.naleo.org/actionalert_march2018
